GW'S AIDS POLICY CENTER RECEIVES
TWO GRANTS TALLING ALMOST $750,000

The AIDS Policy Center, a division of The George Washington University's Intergovernmental Health Policy Project (IHPP), has received grants from both the Ford Foundation and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation (RWJF) totalling almost $750,000. The two-year grants will provide continued support to the Center's AIDS policy information program for state and local government officials.

The RWJF grant is for $311,505 and the Ford Foundation grant is for $437,000.

"We are the only university-based research and information clearinghouse that tracks state legislation on AIDS," says Center director Kate Cauley. "People rely rather heavily on the information we provide."

Established in 1987, the Center has continued to track and analyze all state AIDS legislation and funding to educate policymakers and the media.

Cauley cites the unique role of IHPP and the AIDS Policy Center in this process. "Given the critical need for appropriate funding and policy formation at all levels of government," she notes, "these data have become essential tools in formulating AIDS policy in the U.S. Our purpose is to make sure that accurate, timely information is available to policymakers so that they are fully informed for their work."

In addition to a wide variety of monographs and publications, the Center also publishes its "Intergovernmental AIDS Reports" newsletter six times a year. The Center also supplies information to the National AIDS Information Clearinghouse, makes presentations at national conferences and responds to approximately 100 technical assistance questions from federal, state and local elected officials each month.

"All those questions are answered using the resources of the AIDS policy Center and our network of legislative contacts and community leaders," says Cauley. "I believe our work is respected for its objectivity."

The Ford Foundation, established in 1936, is a private nonprofit institution committed to preserving peace and advancing human welfare. A national and international philanthropy with an endowment of more than $5 billion, the Foundation has granted some $7 billion to more than 9,000 institutions and 100,000

James Millar, director of the Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies at The George Washington University, recently returned from Moscow after coordinating a three-day conference on peace and security issues in North-East Asia. GW President, Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, was a keynote speaker.

The conference, Millar says, was "a sign of the new status of South Korea in the Soviet Union." Moscow State University -- "the Harvard of Moscow" -- sponsored the event along with the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

About 40 people comprised of scholars, researchers and government officials from the U.S., the Soviet Union and South Korea attended the conference.

Most prominent among the South Koreans was Young Seek Choue, Perpetual-President Emeritus of the International Association of University Presidents and Chancellor of Kyung Hee University (Republic of Korea). According to Millar, Kyung Hee University was the first university to establish an institute of peace and was a forerunner of the international peace studies movement.

The conference fostered "networking" and "a better understanding of the problems and issues of peace in Asia," said Millar.

Among the guest speakers at the conference were the economic advisor to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and the author of the "500 Day Plan" to resurrect the Soviet economy. The two men discussed the future of the Soviet economy.

GW FELLOWSHIPS FUND SCHOLARSHIP
IN RUSSIAN AND EAST EUROPEAN STUDIES

The Department of Education has awarded a $179,034 grant to the Russian and East European Studies (REES) program at The George Washington University to fund three academic year fellowships and two summer fellowships, annually. Funding will be provided over a three-year period beginning in 1991.

"We were pleasantly surprised that our first application for a Title VI Fellowship, jointly with Georgetown, was accepted," says James Millar, director of GW's Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies. Georgetown will also receive funding for five fellowships.

Under the agreement, the summer fellowships will allow students to undertake intensive study of less commonly taught languages, such as Czech, Polish or Serbo-Croatian, says Millar. The summer grant is expected to attract several graduate students interested in scholarship on Central and Eastern Europe.

COLD WAR'S END BRINGS NEW CHILLS TO KOREA

The Cold War's end has had a chilling effect on North Korea's relationship with some old friends, while creating warm, new ties for South Korea. This consensus followed a recent, three-day multi-lateral conference in Tokyo on "North-East Asia's Emerging Order in a Changing World."

James Millar, director of the Institute of Sino-Soviet Studies (ISSS) at The George Washington University, says discussions focused on the Koreas and concluded that South Korea is emerging from the Cold War with "new respect and new markets in Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, and China." However, "North Korea has lost friends and influence, and is feeling much pressure at being one of the last of the old Stalinist systems," says Millar.

At one point during the talks, North Korea reluctantly agreed to apply for United Nations membership along with South Korea, thus implicitly acknowledging the Koreas as two separate nations.

MORE

In the past, China has threatened to veto the South's attempts to seek U.N. membership. Not this time, says Millar.

"It was clear that North Korea was very bitter that China would not agree to veto South Korea's application."

The gathering of scholars, business leaders, government officials and journalists was co-sponsored by GW's Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies and by Japan's Yomiuri Shimbun, the world's largest circulation newspaper. Participants represented the United States, Japan, the People's Republic of China, the Soviet Union, Mongolia and North and South Korea.

Other issues discussed included: Japanese foreign policy towards Asia; economic cooperation in Indochina; and the U.S., the Soviet Union and Asia.

Participants included: Kato Hirohisa, executive director and managing editor of The Yomiuri Shimbun; Kim Woochoong, chairman of the Daewoo Corporation, which manufactures South Korea's most popular automobile; Kim Byonghong, deputy director of the Institute for Studies of Disarmament and Peace; and James Kelly, former special assistant to President Ronald Reagan.

The conference was the seventh of a series of multi-lateral conferences directed by GW. Next spring, GW will sponsor a follow-up conference in Washington, DC.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION FUNDS GW PROGRAM FOR MID-CAREER TEACHERS

WASHINGTON, DC -- To encourage mathematics and science professionals to enter teaching careers in America's secondary schools, the U.S. Department of Education has awarded a $100,000 grant to The George Washington University's Department of Teacher Preparation and Special Education to expand its Secondary Teacher Certification Program.

The Department of Education grant will cover 75 percent of the program's cost and the additional 25 percent, or $34,000, will be covered by GW. Started in 1985, the program is geared toward people working in scientific, mathematical and technical careers, including retired military personnel, who wish to pursue teaching as a second career.

"Since only one in three American high school physics students is currently taught by a qualified physics teacher, this program is contributing to the national goal of making America number one in science by the year 2000," says Sharon Lynch, the project's director and an assistant professor at GW. "The trick, of course, is to successfully transplant the mid-career changers into the classroom--teaching them how to be effective." The current participants include 12 future physics teachers, notes Lynch.

The funds will go toward purchasing laboratory materials and textbooks, and to establish a Teacher Certification Information Center at GW where prospective teachers can learn state requirements for certification. The project also will provide personnel to monitor the progress of the future teachers both during the program and after its completion, building up a data base of case studies documenting the progress of the new teachers who have made career changes.

In addition, a substantial portion of the funds will be used to provide stipends of $1,000 per month for three months, issued on a competitive basis for those doing their student teaching internships. Currently, in order to complete the program and become certified to teach, students must teach full-time, unpaid, for 12 weeks. The stipends are key to the success of the program, says Lynch, because full-time student teaching places a burden upon program participants, who are often the primary providers for their families.

"The Secondary Teacher Certification Program attracts highly trained professionals with excellent academic backgrounds and proven leadership ability," says Lynch. "We want teachers who can make science and mathematics exciting and approachable to all students, while still challenging the most able."

GW's School of Education and Human Development has established a series of alternative teacher training programs, many of which are geared toward recruiting professionals from other fields. Participants in some of GW's programs include retired military; government and corporate professionals with expertise in science, math, computers and other technical fields; liberal arts graduates; and former Peace Corps volunteers.

HUGHES IS KEYNOTE SPEAKER FOR OPENING OF SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING APPRENTICE PROGRAM

The Office of Naval Research's (ONR) Debra Hughes is the keynote speaker at the opening ceremonies of The George Washington University's Science and Engineering and Apprentice Program (SEAP) at 10:00 a.m. on June 24, 1991, at the University's Lisner Auditorium, 2023 G Street, NW.

Hughes, deputy director for ONR's Special Programs, will speak on the choices facing today's youth, and on the responsibilities -- both to the nation and to themselves -- implied in those choices.

Cosponsored by the U.S. Department of Defense (DoD) and GW's School of Engineering and Applied Science (SEAS), SEAP allows area high school students to do research in 28 DoD laboratories during an annual eight-week summer program from June 24 through August 16.

Following an official welcome and University greetings from SEAS acting Dean Donald Gross and Vice President for Academic Affairs Roderick French, respectively, SEAP director Marilyn Krupsaw will provide a brief program history.

--More--

Afterwards, the students will regroup according to their laboratory assignments, to meet their fellow apprentices, teacher counselors and laboratory coordinators.

Offered at GW since 1986, the program enables students to work with laboratory scientists to explore such fields as laser optics, advanced biotechnology and artificial intelligence and to write papers on their findings. The students will be aided in their efforts by teacher counselors chosen from area high schools.

The students are selected from candidates who demonstrate a strong interest in math, engineering, computer applications or science. Participants were chosen on the basis of their standardized test scores, academic grades in related subjects, teacher recommendations and extracurricular activities. Candidates also were required to write an essay about their future goals and what they hoped to learn from the program.

The Office of Naval Research's (ONR) Debra Hughes is the keynote speaker at the opening ceremonies of The George Washington University's Science and Engineering and Apprentice Program (SEAP) at 10:00 a.m. on June 24, 1991, at the University's Lisner Auditorium, 2023 G Street, NW.

Hughes, deputy director for ONR's Special Programs, will speak on the choices facing today's youth, and on the responsibilities -- both to the nation and to themselves -- implied in those choices.

Cosponsored by the U.S. Department of Defense (DoD) and GW's School of Engineering and Applied Science (SEAS), SEAP allows area high school students to do research in 28 DoD laboratories during an annual eight-week summer program from June 24 through August 16.

Following an official welcome and University greetings from SEAS acting Dean Donald Gross and Vice President for Academic Affairs Roderick French, respectively, SEAP director Marilyn Krupsaw will provide a brief program history.

Afterwards, the students will regroup according to their laboratory assignments, to meet their fellow apprentices, teacher counselors and laboratory coordinators.

Offered at GW since 1986, the program enables students to work with laboratory scientists to explore such fields as laser optics, advanced biotechnology and artificial intelligence and to write papers on their findings. The students will be aided in their efforts by teacher counselors chosen from area high schools.

The students are selected from candidates who demonstrate a strong interest in math, engineering, computer applications or science. Participants were chosen on the basis of their standardized test scores, academic grades in related subjects, teacher recommendations and extracurricular activities. Candidates also were required to write an essay about their future goals and what they hoped to learn from the program.

GW UNVEILS NEW PUBLICATION ON TEACHING AND LEARNING

A new academic publication that joins the theoretical and practical aspects of teaching and learning is being published by The George Washington University's School of Education and Human Development and the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) Clearinghouse on Higher Education.

"The National Teaching and Learning Forum," appearing six times a year, will "bridge the gap between the sketchy hints and suggestions of 'fast food' teaching advice and the dense language of specialized research," says GW education professor Jonathan Fife, director of the ERIC Clearinghouse on Higher Education.

Each issue of the "Forum" will include articles by faculty members on teaching strategies to help students learn. Other regular features include ERIC Tracks, a compendium on the best new research on teaching and learning; TA Forum, focusing on new faculty; and workshops listing, opportunities for faculty members to sharpen their instructional expertise.

"The time is right for a publication that takes teaching seriously," says Fife, who is a member of the publication's editorial advisory board. "Students, parents and legislators are demanding more effective college teaching. And the increasing diversity of students on campus means teaching methods that have worked in the past will no longer be sufficient."

The premier issue of "The National Teaching and Learning Forum" examines the innovation of one University of Oklahoma professor's innovative method of teaching students 18th Century literature by using personal computers. Other articles delve into the lack of training for teaching assistants, and how advances in cognitive science are helping create a new model of teaching and learning.

James Rhem, a former professor and founding editor of many higher education publications, including "Academic Leader," is executive editor of "The National Teaching and Learning Forum." The publication's editorial advisory board consists of teaching experts from educational associations, colleges and universities and national research centers.

ERIC is a sponsored project of The George Washington University School of Education and Human Development.

Review copies of "The National Teaching and Learning Forum" are available on request.
